EXTRACTS.

"SWEETNESS AND LIGHT."
(Dedicated to the School of Advanced Thought.)

I have a growing intense,
To which words do justice but light,
I long with a longing intense,
Bethelized "Sweetness and Light."

I seek it in London in vain;

In vain o'er the pavement I look;

For Sweetness I find a draught,

For Light I encounter fog.

I search nondescript groves,
And venture hither to remark,
That strangely it somehow behoves
All Sons to be sour and dark.

I follow an African track

Where white man ne'er planted his feet.

To find that the negroes are black,

And anything rather than sweet.

Fun.

The negative merits he possessed, and which, in a humbler sphere of life, would have gained him at the most a competence, were sufficient to place him almost in the front rank of English statesmen. Society only required of him not to play the fool, and his bestowal rich rewards in return for his compliance. He has received everything with which these take root is surprising; The cultivation, however, leaves much to be desired; and the laziness of the peasant is such that he may actually be seen carrying out the pruning by turning donkeys, mules, and goats into the vineyards to eat down the shoots after the grapes are picked, sooner than go to the trouble of cutting off the branches and carrying them elsewhere to the cattle. A disease has made its appearance among the vines in Limassol of late years. It is not due to the phylloxera; but although it sometimes kills the plant outright it has been hitherto entirely disregarded. Its nature is now, however, being investigated by the principal fruit-officer, who belongs to the French service.

From July to December the bazaars are crammed with grapes which are sold for less than a penny a pound. They are of various kinds—black, red, green, pale, Muscat (miskat), and, needless to say, the same that make the Sultana raisins. Some of the grapes are fine as to be exceeded in flavour and in the size of both the grape and the bunch only by the best English hot-house grapes. The truant-cultivator might be extorted in Cyprus a sum given against him, and in favour of the Duke of Hamilton, he still asserts his right to it. Without suspending the trial of particular towards Napoleon III's cousin, one may be permitted to observe that the decision arrived at caused no little surprise to persons acquainted with the subject. It is a fundamental principle of French heraldry that le ventre n'aobbit pas, and the Duke of Hamilton is descended from Arran only in the female line, from which one may conclude that the arguments upon which the French Court based its judgment were of the most convincing.

Among other trifles which the Duke has picked up in the course of a laborious career we see the Lord Lieutenant of Donegal, the Grand-Master of the Freemasons of Ireland, and the D.C.L. of Oxford which Donegal and Taines are proud to receive. He is also Major-General of the Royal Company of Scottish Archers, and a Colonel of Volunteers. When last heard of he was investing King Humbert of Italy with the Order of the Garter, which meant a pleasant little trip to Rome and back for himself and such friends as he chose to take with him, at the expense of the Treasury. John Bull is a good-natured uncle, and these outings cause many little people a deal of pleasure, while they can do nobody any possible harm.—Truth.
